BIO:

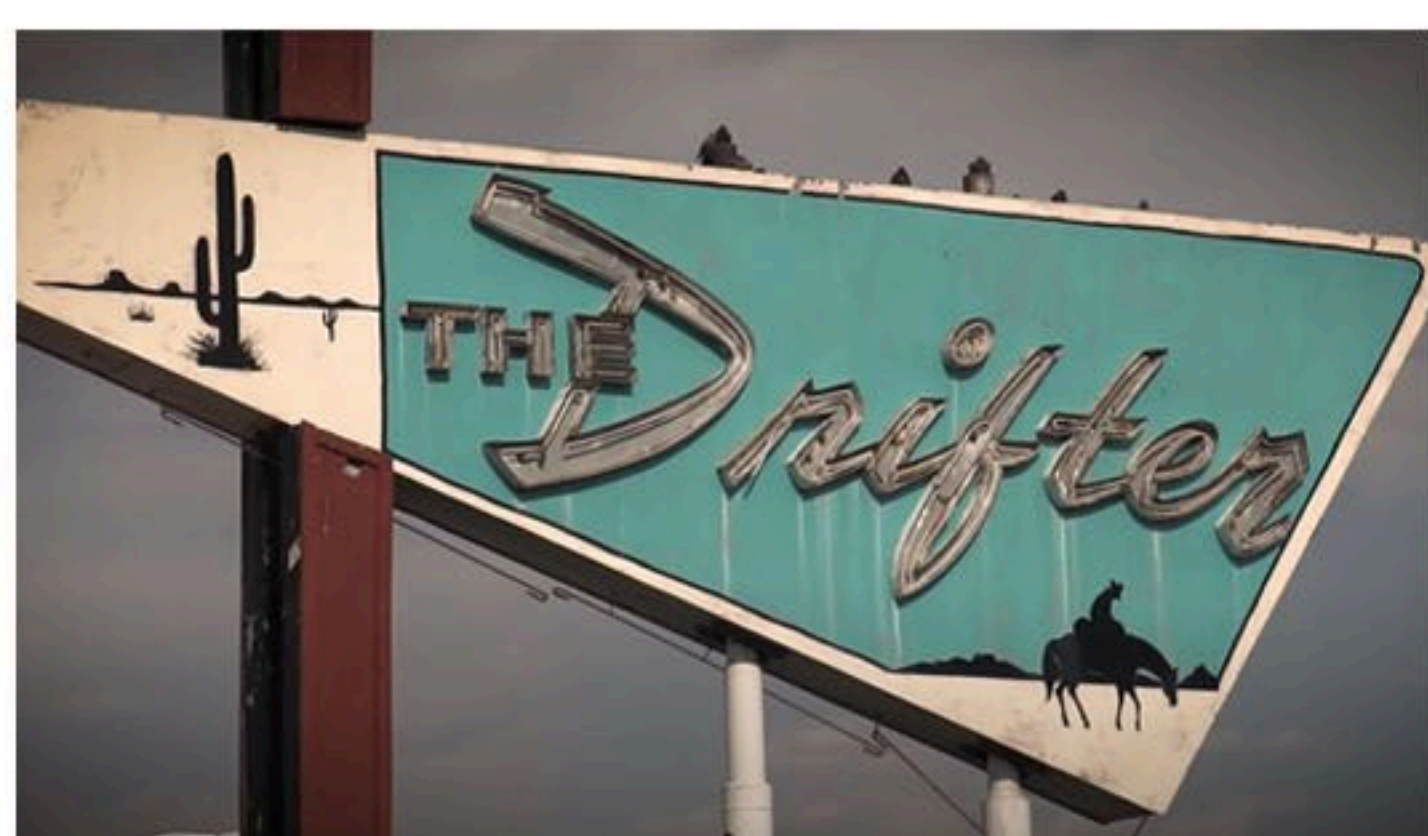

David Gideon is the kind of larger-than-life character you'd read about in a Jack Kerouac novel: adventure seeking, well traveled and a little bit wild, with stories to tell and songs to sing.

Gideon's sound follows in the vein of greats like Townes Van Zandt, John Prine and Johnny Cash. Gideon has self-produced two solo albums in New Mexico and toured in support of their releases. Along his way, he moved back to Nashville where he recorded his most recent album, Lonesome Desert Strum.

Joining him in the studio for the album's creation were a number of legendary sidemen, including Dave Roe (Johnny Cash, Sturgill Simpson), Kenny Vaughan (Marty Stuart, Lucinda Williams), Steve Hinson (George Jones), Billy Contreras (Ricky Skaggs' Kentucky Thunder, Hank Williams III), Pete Abbott (Average White Band), and Chris Scruggs (Charlie Louvin, BR549).

Lonesome Desert Strum is a classic-sounding album for modern times, inspired by the best parts of the past. It's David Gideon in a nutshell: warm, wizened, western, and a little untamed.
